DETAILED ACTION

1. The Examiner has pointed out particular references contained in the prior art of record in the body of this action for the convenience of the Applicant. Although the specified citations are representative of the teachings in the art and are applied to the specific limitations within the individual claims, other passages and figures apply as well. It is requested from the Applicant, in preparing the response, to consider fully the entire references as well as the context of all passages in the cited references as potentially teaching all or part of the claimed inventions.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Rumsey, US Patent Publication No. US 2002/090072 A1, filed January 9, 1999.

As per claims 1, 8 and 12.

Rumsey discloses

A [system/ticket collector/method] for providing call accounting services (Abstract; Summary of the Invention), the system comprising:

a first network (Par. 8, 27-29: "a hotel/hotel chain") collecting ...call parameter information; and a second network (Par. 27 "a remote call accounting service/service provider") receiving ... and processing the call parameter information for generating a usage profile (Par. 23-24: "a hotel guest's phone bill"); wherein the call parameter information is transmitted from the first network to the second network over a public computer network (Par. 21: "the Internet").

Art Unit: 3621

Rumsey does not disclose encrypting and decrypting the transmissions between the client network and the service provider network. However he does teach that security of data is important, and that passwords may be used to protect said data (Par. 30). It would have been obvious to one ordinarily skilled in the art at the time the invention was made to add encryption and decryption methods to those transmissions, in order to further increase the security of proprietary and sensitive financial information belonging to the client organization as well as to the individual users of the system.

As per claim 2.

Rumsey discloses all the limitations of claim 1.

He further discloses

.. the first network is an enterprise network (a hotel chain).

As per claim 3.

Rumsey discloses all the limitations of claim 1.

He further discloses

the first network includes a private branch exchange unit for generating the call parameter information (Par. 21: "PBX");

Rumsey does not disclose

a storage device for storing the call parameter information; and an encrypter for encrypting the call parameter information.

However storage devices and encryption methods are well known and widely used in the art, and it would have been obvious to one ordinarily skilled in the art at the time the invention was made that the system envisioned by Rumsey would inherently have storage devices to store call parameter information, should batch processing of call data be chosen as a preferred embodiment, for non time-sensitive applications. Likewise, encryption methods would have been an obvious addition to the Rumsey system, in order to further provide security for the transmissions between client organization and the remote call accounting system.

Art Unit: 3621

As per claim 4.

Rumsey discloses all the limitations of claim 1.

He does not specifically disclose

...the second network is a service provider network.

However he does mention that the remote call accounting system would be provided by a service provider (Par. 27). It would have been obvious to one ordinarily skilled that a service provider in the business of providing accounting services to an enterprise such as a hotel chain in all likelihood would inherently have a network of servers and storage devices to accommodate the high volume of data that would be coming from such large clients.

As per claims 5, 9 and 13.

Rumsey discloses all the limitations of claim 1, 8 and 12.

He further discloses

... the public computer network is a public internet (Par. 21).

As per claims 6, 10 and 14.

Rumsey discloses all the limitations of claim 1, 8 and 12.

He does not specifically disclose using email as a method for the remote call accounting service to report back to the client organization a user profile.

However Rumsey does disclose using a public network, the Internet, for communicating between all parties to the system. Therefore it would have been obvious of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention that email would be one method for transmitting such user profiles back to the client organization. Such a method would obviate the need for the client organization's administrative staff to access the RCAS system to download or view the profiles generated by the RCAS system, thus making it more attractive to potential users.

... information is transmitted via electronic mail.

As per claims 7, 11 and 15.

Rumsey discloses all the limitations of claim 1, 8 and 12.

Art Unit: 3621

He further discloses

... the usage profile includes call cost information (Par. 28).
